Dear Food and Drug Administration:

In regard to the clandestine idea of not labeling irradiated food, we at my company find this to be the most underhanded idea in the history of food processing. Indeed, it is blatant tyranny to deprive the public of their right to know about a possibly carcinogenic process, a process so controversial that already several large countries (Sweden, Switzerland, Germany, New Zealand and more) have banned the import and production of irradiated food. Don't let this cover-up of our right to know happen. Instead, be the public servants you claim to be and let us KNOW when food is irradiated, and the label should be LARGE enough to see easily. It's the only correct thing to do.

Thank you for your kind regard.

Yours in truth and service,

Jesse C. Wolf: CEO World Changing Books
